Jet Airport Plan Still Big Question

The question of whether Palm Beach County can afford a "jet age" airport should be answered in several weeks, County Commissioner Lake Lytal said Tuesday.

Lytal reported he expects the feasibility survey on the proposed modern day airfield to be completed in "two or three weeks."

The report, being prepared by the New York firm of Coverdale and Colquhitt, will tell the board if it should go ahead with plans for an eight to 11 million dollar airport in the northwest section of the county.

Lytal said if the report is favorable to a new airport, the Commission will begin immediately to "tie up the land."

The board would then have to determine a method to finance the project.

Currently, the Commission is favorable to a plan which would call for borrowing the necessary capital and pledging Palm Beach International Airport and Palm Beach International Airport and Palm Beach Air Force Base as security.

The air base will be deeded back to the county by the U. S. government when the field is completely deactivated July 1.

Lytal said the board feels it can recover a major share of the cost of building the new airport from "proper sale of the base and PBA property. He added the only alternative would be a revenue bond program.

"But we won't know until the survey if a bond issue is possible," Lytal said. "We don't think it's the most desirable way, though."

Pensacola Will Have Celebration

PENSACOLA—The 1959 Quadracentennial Festival celebration at Pensacola will include a restored Spanish village, duplicate of the town which stood on Santa Rosa Island from 1723-1754.

To man the fifteen-building village, Quadracentennial officials will bring to this country ten Spanish craftsmen normally employed in a Spanish government fair at Barcelona. These artisans using the tools and techniques of two and more centuries ago, will occupy the houses as well as reproduce articles of the sort that were made and used by early Pensacola settlers.

The Spanish village will include the Governor's Palace, a stockade, Commandant's quarters, Catholic Church and other authentic reproductions of the original buildings. The village will open with the remainder of the festival grounds May 13. It will remain open until shortly after Labor Day.

Screw Worm Plan Grows Many Flies

SEBRING—More than 1,600,000 screwworm flies have been reared since January 1, according to officials of the combined state-federal "Screwworm Eradication Program." Year-end production figures will put the total output to nearly two billion.
